85th Legislative Session in Review

WRITTEN BY STEPHANIE LIMB

On Memorial Day, the 85th legislative session came to an end, at least temporarily. With a special session scheduled for July 18, the reprieve from the politics of lawmaking is brief. Nonetheless, the 140 days that composed the 85th regular session yielded some significant outcomes for Texas hospitals.

Medicaid and the State Budget

The state budget for 2018-19 – how much the state will spend and on what – was one of the more challenging items of the legislative session. And the only bill lawmakers are required to pass. Despite Texas' wide tax base and diversified economy, the recent drop in oil prices brought a loss of tax revenue and about $10 billion less for budget writers to appropriate for state operations and programs. Compounding the budget shortfall was the high-profile need to give the state's beleaguered children's protective services agency a significant funding boost.

In addition to how much to spend and on what, lawmakers had to decide on a source of funding. From the outset, budget writers in the House and Senate disagreed over whether to tap the state's "Rainy Day Fund" or rely on accounting maneuvers instead. Ultimately, budget writers chose both approaches.

In the final outcome, the financial pressures resulted in less funding for the Medicaid program for 2018-19, compared with 2016-17. Medicaid will get $62.4 billion in state and federal funds for 2018-19, a decrease of about $2 billion compared with the current biennium. As is typical, a supplemental appropriation will be needed during the next legislative session in 2019 to provide additional retroactive Medicaid funding to make up for the funding shortfall.

Despite this Medicaid underfunding, however, it is notable that Texas hospitals were not the subject of direct funding or payment cuts. In addition, the base budget bill included funding to preserve increased Medicaid reimbursement rates for trauma, safety-net and rural hospitals. This $307 million in state funding maintains current funding amounts.

Lawmakers also maintained funding to help Texas trauma hospitals offset some of their uncompensated trauma care costs. Using funds from "Account 5111," the state will provide $29 million to designated trauma hospitals over the biennium.

CORPORATE PROFILE

PatientMatters®
 Patient-Centered. Partner-Focused.™

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY
 PatientMatters LLC transforms the patient financial experience by leveraging data from across the health care system, the industry as a whole and the individual patient. PatientMatters uses this data to model the ideal patient financial path to improve patient satisfaction with all aspects of the financial process. We begin by first improving employee satisfaction with industry-leading tools, education and on-site coaching. Through this more patient-centered financial journey, patients feel like valued customers, making them much more likely to pay their obligations.

HISTORY
 PatientMatters began when CEO Sheila Schweitzer envisioned a company that would help hospitals, which are sensitive to their communities and patients, prepare for the new patient-as-a-consumer reality.

The PatientMatters team developed a program that clearly articulates a hard ROI, provides an integrated technology suite, and offers a unique solution to both the health care system and the patient.

CULTURE CHANGE IS KEY
 Hospitals traditionally have used the same business practices for all patients. Over the past couple of years, there have been significant discussions around the need for patient estimates, insurance verification, point-of-service collections and similar ideas, but the discussions have been a repackaging of old business practices from the same vendors.

Hospitals should navigate patients through their financial journey in a way that is most beneficial to both the patients and themselves. This journey is scary and confusing for patients – not unlike their clinical care.

Doing this correctly requires real change, not just making the same transactions at a different time along the journey. It requires new data, captured as early as possible, to understand the patient. Today, you must help the patient navigate the financial journey according to his or her circumstances, and doing so requires innovative navigation processes, such as aligning insured and uninsured patients on different paths from the start. Collecting all of this new data, albeit from disparate sources, is important, but storing the data in non-integrated databases fragments the process. This fragmentation has significant negative impacts on the patients' journey because it often requires different outside processes. Having the data, presenting it in a meaningful way, and training your staff to identify the proper course for your patient is key to a rewarding journey for the patient and an improved financial outcome for your hospital.

HOW WE HELP
 PatientMatters changes the paradigm with a financial care plan that transforms patients into educated consumers, empowering them to engage effectively with the health care system and improving the satisfaction of both patients and staff. It also improves health system financial performance by:

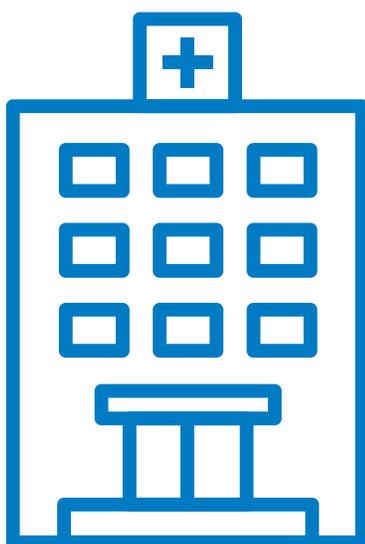

- Dedicating a team of resources and experts to streamline the areas in which patients interact with your health care system;
- Deploying programs to defragment the patient experience and reduce cash leakage;
- Consolidating information from across the business to get a clearer picture of each patient in order to tailor payment options;
- Generating fees only when we drive a true increase in financial performance. Your success is our success.

When hospitals and health care systems leverage our programs, they observe how educating staff and patients can change behavior. More money is collected, patients become engaged, and employees feel empowered.

EMERGING TRENDS
Hospital Culture
In today's health care environment, organizational culture affects both financial success and patient satisfaction. Implementing strategies to create a healthy work environment can reduce turnover costs and maximize excellence in patient care.

From the perspective of the patient, comfort, care and confidence are measurements of quality. Just like expertise and evidence in treatment, all of those elements can directly affect long term health outcomes.

Employee Turnover
Retaining and attracting physicians continues to be a high priority for hospitals and health care organizations nationwide. A 2011 report from the Association of American Medical Colleges indicates that the United States will face a shortage of 46,000-90,000 physicians by 2025.

With the demand for physicians outpacing the supply, retaining and attracting doctors must be a priority for hospital administrators. Similar principles apply when it comes to attracting and retaining nursing staff. Turnover among registered nurses can have a significant impact on the hospital's bottom line. A 2008 study found that the pre-fee and post-fee cost of replacing just one registered nurse ranges from $82,000 to $88,000.

Loosening and re-tightening physicians and nurses affects the experience of patients. Committed, engaged and satisfied employees means better patient care.

Professional Development
The good news is research shows that interprofessional education can be effective in creating healthy hospital cultures. A comprehensive workplace improvement plan might include educating physicians and nurses on the importance of conflict resolution, collaboration and effective communication, as well as providing physicians and nurses with specific strategies for being successful.

Texas Hospital Association endorsed partner DCS works with your management team to ease the challenges in handling conflict and improve employee communication and cooperation, allowing the focus to stay on what matters most: high-quality patient care.

Training, consulting and crisis intervention through DCS focus on leadership, collaboration, communication and conflict management with an open, energetic framework. This perspective enables individuals and organizations to leverage conflict or potential conflict into opportunities for growth and excellence.
